A Flash in the Pan Lilian Kendrick
A picture paints a thousand words, or so they say. But how many words does it take to paint a picture? With a palette of a mere 1,000 words or less, Lilian Kendrick paints stories of jealousy, sexuality, and humour.
Her prose is tinted with glimpses of love as well as darker shades of horror and revenge.
Inside, you'll discover a reader in a dreamy conversation with a favourite author, you'll hear a sinner confess all, see Joey the clown finally get the last laugh, and share a woman's memory of her first time.
They’re postcards, really, in this flash fiction anthology, but pictures clear enough to be photographs at times and dreamy watercolours at others.
