Leadership is a teachable trait. And, no sports position requires leadership from a player more than football does from the quarterback. You cannot expect the quarterback to know how to be a leader. You have to teach him how to function as a leader. The quarterback's leadership influence is not just limited to his team. His leadership reach extends to the support staff, the students and faculty in the school, the community and in the surrounding area. He is the CEO of the football organization. And, he needs to be taught how to recognize and take advantage of his leadership opportunities to make the team the best it can be. Coach Bill Renner has extensive experience as a head football coach turning around high school football programs. He has tutored his quarterbacks and they have exceled on the field regionally, All-State players, and nationally, Elite 11 Quarterbacks. But, it is his system of teaching leadership to the quarterback which has enabled his quarterback and his teams to reach their full potential. He recognizes the need to have the quarterback be the leader of the team and he gives him a system to know how, when and what leadership techniques to use. Using Coach Renner's leadership system your quarterback becomes your voice within the player ranks echoing the team principles that are necessary to have a winning program. In How to Teach a Quarterback to be a Leader, Coach Renner gives you specific ways to teach your quarterback leadership. On-the-field, in the locker room, around the school, in the weight room, out in the community all are opportunities the quarterback needs to be taught to be aware of where he can exert his leadership. Coach Renner details for you how to teach leadership to your quarterback in a simple and easy to understand way. He gives you a leadership checklist and leadership principles that are easily implemented to teach a quarterback in any program.
