Words speak, do you listen? The Concept of Acronymic Interpretation of Selected Words Eric David Word speak, do you listen? The Concept of Acronymic Interpretation of Selected Words. The concept is rooted on my desire to give more attention as to how a word should be interpreted. There is no argument that the dictionary, Webster or otherwise, does that task for us and gives us as many meanings a word could possibly have. Aside from the meanings of a word, a dictionary has the synonyms, antonyms, pronunciations, usage, etc. But a question kept bugging my mind: does the dictionary really tell us everything that we should or wanted know about in a word? This concept provides a different approach in remembering and understanding the meaning of words. We can find a deeper sense of value on the interpretations made on the words as we can become more conscious over what is the true message each word hides within. A word could just be a single word, but in reality it is a composition of words. After an in-depth reflection and much thinking, the idea flashed before me so I began to note things down as words come passing before by eyes, so to speak. As I watch things happening around the world and where I live at, I realized that in so many occasions, people, and it does not exempt me, have at certain times “mis-interpret” words despite knowing their meanings. People have the tendency to swing away from the real context of a given word specially those that directly influence their lives. Consequently, the improper interpretation of a word leads to some form of mis-understanding needless to say failure, on the part of the person/s involved because of wrong understanding. So I began the adventure of acronymic interpretation and true enough, I have clearly seen that “words tell us exactly what they mean and how they must be understood”. My thoughts revealed that there is more than just merely looking up the meaning of the words in a dictionary. Words actually “speak” and reveal “secrets” which we can decipher well enough and if we carefully “listen” to them, we will be surprised to “hear” that they do “speak” in a certain way. I have to emphasize the fact that my interpretative words work only with the English language. Its translation to another language could be possible but, there would be a clear distortion on the very interpretation of a given word, since words are spelled differently in English and in any other language. Spelling therefore is the major piece of argument of this work since interpretation is basically dependent on how the words are written – letter by letter.Words move our lives, we live with words and necessarily we depend on words. Without words, how do we live? Imagine how communication could have been without words. Deprived of the word “work” what do we do to get things done? Without the word “money” how do we buy things?, to give a few examples. So words are our life as much as our life depends on words. My analysis shows the virtue of this work, although I am positive that academes, linguists and intellectuals would not give this work much of an attention and would consider it as a “game”, unworthy of any consideration. Nevertheless, it is a work of art, like interpretative dancing. The value of this work lies on how appreciative a reader is and how the interpretation of the words will affect him/her their lives using my concept.
