Randall, of Wisconsin, at the time First Assistant, took charge of the Department. There was a remarkable increase in the correspondence The designation of topographer of the Department is first found in a law of 1836, and the office was confirmed in the Revised Code, act of June 8, 1872. For some time previous to 1836, Capt. W. H. Swift, a distinguished officer of the United States engineer corps, rendered assistance towards the surveys and mapping of the post routes. of the loyal States during the recent war, as will appear from the following statement: Postal revenue from the entire Union, for fiscal year ending June 30th, 1861 $9,049,296 40 Postal revenue from the loyal States, for fiscal year. The close of the war having necessitated a restoration of the postal service in the Southern States, the Department made vigorous efforts in 1865 to effect this desirable object. To aid in the matter it sent special agents to that section, and notified the Provisional Governors of its readiness to appoint postmasters, on their recommendation. In his annual report of December, 1865, Mr. Dennison reiterated the doctrine of Mr. Holt, in reference to an adherence on the part of the Department to the self-sustaining policy on which its affairs had been conducted for nearly half a century, but so widely departed from during the succeeding 20 years. He was of the opinion that, under an economical policy, it could not only pay its way from year to year, but enlarge its usefulness in all its legitimate functions. Like his predecessor referred to, he contended that the expenditure for sustaining routes, put in operation for national objects, in so far as they were not postal i...
