What brings two people together? Fate? Attraction? Or Dark Past? Will they be together as much as GOD wants them to be? Will there be any virtues of this relationships?

At eighteen years old, Hannah Fisher loves her life with her family and enjoys the simple chores that make up her everyday life. She works alongside her mother, father and brothers each day, but lately she's begun to notice a whole in her heart, something missing that didn't seem important before. More than anything, she desires a family of her own.

During a barn raising event for one of her neighbors, Hannah meets a handsome stranger whose sad eyes immediately capture her heart. Although she doesn't know anything about him, she longs to spend time with him and discover the source of his sadness. Her prayers become inundated with thoughts and requests for the young man she loves.

"I don't expect your love after you read this letter, Hannah. But I hope for the peace that I've been looking for. I want you to be happy forever, and if it means that I have to stay away from you, I will do it…"

John Graber has no idea that he's lived practically next door to the woman of his dreams for most of his life. After his rumspringa years, he's suffered from bouts of deep depression and melancholy, although few people understand his reasons. Young John knows that he's being punished by God, and he's determined to accept whatever punishment God deems worthy, even if it means spending his life alone and unhappy.

When he meets beautiful Hannah, everything changes and he desires to be released from his torment so that he can be free to pursue her. She agrees to his proposal of courtship, but he soon discovers that his past will not let go so easily. He must find a way to break free, but has no idea what lies in store for him and his beloved.

Can Hannah discover the source of John's heartache in time to help him?

Will John learn to forgive himself so that he can move on?

What will Samuel decide—go or stay?
