Varamientos masivos de calderones en Patagonia, Argentina: Una historia de vida pendiente (Spanish Edition) María Fernanda García
El delfín piloto de aleta larga o calderón común (Globicephala melas edwardii) frecuentemente vara en las costas de Patagonia, Argentina. En la provincia de Chubut, durante los últimos 25 años tuvieron lugar tres varamientos masivos: Punta Tombo 1982 (N=17); Playa Biarritz 1989 (N=36) y Punta Tafor 1991 (N=430). En cada oportunidad se recolectaron datos de sexo, largo y edad, determinada mediante lectura de secciones de dientes descalcificados. Con los datos obtenidos se estudió la relación de sexos, el crecimiento corporal y la estructura de edad de cada varamiento. Se utilizó el modelo de Barlow-Boveng (1991) para obtener la curva de supervivencia de la subespecie. Los resultados obtenidos mostraron diferencias en la proporción de sobrevivientes por clase de edad con respecto de la población del Atlántico Norte. Finalmente se revisó la bibliografía disponible de varamientos descriptos para la especie en el hemisferio norte y sur, encontrando que existe una tendencia espacio-temporal en la ocurrencia de los eventos masivos. De acuerdo con análisis previos, la periodicidad y ocurrencia de los varamientos masivos podría ser una de las fuerzas que regula el tamaño poblacional.
